Shirley and my mother Mary Cayton were in the hospital at the same time for open heart surgery in 1995. After recovering, they both went to cardiac rehab classes at Baylor Hospital of Garland. They became best friends. Shirley kept their class fun by telling jokes and planning events. With her theatrical flair, she would write verses and songs and dress up her classmates with costumes and wigs for the events. When my mom could no longer drive, she often visited her with a new joke.
After Mom died, I continued to see Shirley. She was like another mother to me. As a teacher, I loved hearing about her adventures teaching in Oklahoma and Texas. Her fondest memories were about teaching art. The walls of her house were decorated with her own beautiful paintings.
One day we went to the Dallas Museum of Art. She had not been there for many years. We spent a long time admiring her favorite painting Icebergs by Frederick March. I gave her a reproduction of it which she had framed and hung over her couch. I also gave her a book about the artist, and she loved it as well.
Shirley had a wonderful outlook on life. She believed in helping others like the time she sent a big box of art supplies to the VA hospital. Shirley was a beautiful person whose grace, generosity and humor influenced so many of us. I truly loved her.

Shirley was my next-door neighbor in Lake Highlands for thirty years. We always had long conversations standing out in our front yards. She thought the world of my husband Tom, who mowed her yard each week. She was intelligent and thoughtful and a good neighbor.

My name is Sherri Smith. I had the pleasure of spending time with Shirley every week for the past 2-3 years. She was a character. She loved to laugh and make those around her laugh. That would absolutely make her day if she could make some random stranger laugh at her silly jokes. I saw her go though some tough days in the time I spent with her, especially the last year but she still always had a laugh or joke even when she was going through the toughest day.

She loved her family so much. I feel like I know them all even though most I have never met. I have heard all the stories. How much she loved her father and her 'boys' shenanigans growing up, her 'sister cousin'. She was so proud of her grandkids.

She loved everyone and she would give you the shirt off her back if she thought you needed it. I remember once she made me pull the car over because she wanted to give her cane to a random older man who was struggling to walk down the street. He wouldn't accept it (for which I was thankful, since she really needed it herself). She was the most generous person.

I loved her a lot...I will miss seeing her & spending time with her.

You will be missed Shirley...
